Welcome

FROM DIANE

Hello Everyone :-)

Spring has arrived and thanks to a wet winter we have been very blessed to be surrounded with brilliant green landscape and California poppies. We are hoping to get much more rain before summer sets in to begin filling up our water tables due to the drought that we are in. The trees on the mountain love the rains especially since part of our forest is being cut down due to pine beetles ravishing our weakened pine trees. I would love to see pipelines built for transferring water from overburdened states to others that require it. We could all be helping each other.

It is an interesting adventure living amongst the wildlife on our mountain (bear, bobcat, mountain lions, deer, elk, wild boar, coyote, fox, vultures, hawks and condor). We have noticed very few deer of late coming through our yard (they used to come and stay for a while) as we live on a deer trail. A few months ago a mountain lion took down a deer between our home and our neighbors in the middle of the night although we did not witness it, our neighbors did. We have noticed changes in the deer population ever since. We believe the lion is either living in the ravine behind our home or this is part of its territory.

Just recently, I was warned in a dream twice in one night to watch our sheltie, Tucker as he was confronted by a mountain lion each time. We do not let our animals outside in our fenced yard by themselves because of where we live. Although, when we go for a ride Tucker will not run directly to the truck because he goes potty first so we are watching him like a hawk. I may have mentioned this in a previous newsletter before and I am still in awe of it. We woke up one night to a Bobcat sleeping on our deck railing right outside of our master bedroom. We turned on the light and he did not run, just squinted his eyes. It is a beautiful area and one thing that we always have to remember is these non-domestic animals were living here long before we all moved in. As you see they are becoming comfortable being around us, although they are still wild and we respect that.

Jeffrey and I wish you a beautiful summer packed with adventure and fun.

*Much Love,
Diane*

It is a year of spectacular movement and autonomy. As the individual(s) align(s) with pure intentions and desires, a solid foundation is formed. It then begins to generate the momentum towards a preferred outcome. The speed at which it appears is dependent upon the unwavering depth and actions put toward the goal. Analytical vacillation slows the process or stops it all together.

Because it is a magnetic year movement is encouraged and stagnancy results in escalating discomfort. What you consistently give energy to whether perceived as positive or negative is projected outward and will mirror itself back to you. It is a benefit to be consciously aware of your thoughts and expressions during this heightened stage of creating.

Your world is in a state of flux. The heads of nations are watching movements of one another with trepidation. They will put up their defenses with unease and push the boundaries for a response. They are not sure who their allies really are which creates uneasiness and impatience while their distrust continues to escalate. Faltering leadership gives a sense of instability and these countries are looking to one another for the answers. Until there is a defined, strong leader of a nation that others can look up to, this compulsion will continue.
